

I know I've talked about what I am thankful for, but in prayer this morning I shifted slightly to reflect on and thank God for how we are growing as a result of our current experience.

- As a teacher, I have been forced to embrace new strategies and methods of delivering instruction and through technology that I had previously resisted.
- I see friendships being strengthened as a result of deeper prayer and more time to connect with each other.
- My three girls growing closer together and closer to their friends as they deal with this isolation and find ways to occupy their time.
- This experience continues to draw me nearer to my God.

The list can go on and on. I would encourage you to pause, maybe talk with each other and consider what positives or how you or those close to you are growing as a result of the circumstances we now find ourselves in.

Have a great day,
